

THE FUTURE: TOTALITARIAN TECHNOCRACY

A NAZBOL MANIFESTO ADDENDUM

THE FUTURE: TOTALITARIAN TECHNOCRACY

A NAZBOL MANIFESTO ADDENDUM

In this chapter I finally want to talk about the future.

Usually when you ask people which ideology they believe and then ask them which ideology they think will be triumphant in the end, they will answer the same thing twice. That's because most people believe that their way of thinking will eventually win out and triumph over all the other ideologies. They essentially believe in Hollywood style "happy ending". At least "happy ending" from their point of view of course. I am not one of those people.

I am strongly aware that there is a difference between what you want to happen and what will actually happen. Just because you want things to end up certain way doesn't mean that they will actually end up that way. Just because you want to win, doesn't mean that you will win. I consider it wishful thinking if people automatically assume that their own ideology will win in the end over all others. Even if you strongly believe that your ideas are correct, doesn't necessary mean that those ideas will dominate the political debate in the future. Truth doesn't always win.

So even though I want the ideology of National Bolshevism to take over in the future, I don't actually think it will happen. So what do I think the future holds? Which social system do I think will dominate in the future? I think it will be Totalitarian Technocracy.

Now you might say that National Bolshevism is a form of Totalitarian Technocracy as well and I would agree with you, I certainly believe that a National Bolshevik state would be essentially technocratic, but in this case I mean a completely different kind of totalitarian technocracy. I think it will be Totalitarian Technocracy of no particular ideological flavor. Ideology-less totalitarian and technocratic state. It will be a system where ideologies ceased to exist. A system where the divide between right-wing and left-wing, capitalism and socialism, globalism and nationalism, all political and ideological dualities ceased to exist. There will be only one ideology, the only one allowed by the state and that will be loyalty to the state.

Why do I think such system will triumph in the end? Because it is a natural evolution of things in my opinion. On one side you have extremist forces that are trying to take over and create a totalitarian state, on the other side you have people who are trying to prevent that by tightening the surveillance and usage of other Orwellian police state methods. Either the extremist win and create a totalitarian state or the other side will create one by trying to prevent that. In the end they will create the very thing they were trying to prevent the whole time. Sweet irony. It is Ouroboros, a positive feedback loop, a self-fulfilling prophecy.

But, you say, if the extremists win, then they will create a totalitarian state that won't be ideology-less. And you are right, it won't be... at least not at first. But eventually even the most ideologically driven totalitarian state will turn into an ideologically hollow dictatorship which makes decisions purely on practical basis. It might take few generations to get there, but eventually it will happen. Just look at China.

But what about ideologies that want to dissolve the state, you say. What about Anarchism or Anarcho-Capitalism? If those won, there would be no totalitarian state, right? You're wrong. Even those ideologies eventually lead to state. If you dissolve the state, then what happens? The corporations will take over everything and they will grow bigger and bigger and eventually they will become the state. Eventually one mega-corporation will get so big that it will swallow up all the other corporations, monopolize everything and becomes a new state. Never doubt that a corporation that controls 100% of products on the market and has private military "security forces" so large that it can rival regular militaries will eventually start behaving just like the state.

But what about non-capitalist anarchism? Isn't hope at least there? No. As I already explained in previous chapters: People will require security, that will lead to formation of voluntary "watch" of vigilantes, which will eventually turn into a police force and becomes a seed of a new state.

The conclusion is inescapable. All paths lead to the same result: A totalitarian technocratic state. Actually you could see the whole history as a series of rises, falls and comebacks of totalitarian states. Every time a group of people rises against an oppressive totalitarian state and manages to take it down and replace it with a new system, eventually their own system turns into a totalitarian state itself. And the cycle continues. It never ends. Or at least it didn't yet. But maybe it might now. The technological era might allow the totalitarian technocratic state to remain in power indefinitely. Technological-totalitarianism might be finally the end of this never-ending cycle as the state can use super-modern technology to dodge any attempt at taking it down. Who knows, we will see.