And these spies don't just consist of Chinese immigrants. According to Guo, many of them are treasonous Americans who have sold their country out for a paycheck, and they can be ruthless.

China's budget for intelligence gathering before 2012 was around $600 million annually.

Around 2012, a decision was made by Chinese leaders to dispatch another 5,000 spies to the United States. "Some of them were sent as students, some as businessmen, and some as immigrants, but all together, 5,000," Guo said.

"In addition to that, they developed between 15,000 to 18,000 other spies, and these are not directly sent but these are developed within the United States."

The recruited agents are not limited to Asians and Chinese-Americans but include all ethnic groups, including Hispanics, Blacks, and Caucasians.

"And now the budget is between $3 billion to $4 billion annually, and this is information up to one month ago," he said.

Guo said American counterintelligence agencies face several problems, mainly a lack of knowledge about Chinese intelligence agencies.

"You don't know which organizations in China are responsible for sending these spies, how they are managed, and to what purpose," he said. "And the U.S. adopts a very legalistic perspective to look at the question of spying. Yet, for China their methods are not what the United States understands."

"These spies, when they come to the United States, they could sleep around, they could put poison in your glass of wine to kill you; completely unscrupulous," he said.

As for their goals, Guo claims that the spies are mainly here to steal military technologies. But they're also here to "buy" high level government officials, as well as political and corporate elites who can give China favorable business deals. And most what's most frightening, is that these spies have implanted malicious software in our most critical infrastructure systems, and have thoroughly infiltrated our government's major weapons suppliers.

Which raises an important question. How did our government let this happen? Isn't the all powerful NSA surveillance grid capable of catching these people?

Apparently not. It appears that we've traded our freedom for security, but somewhere along the line we didn't receive any security. While our government was busy funding and training the terrorists that would later inspire the acceptance of widespread government surveillance and the destruction of our civil liberties, they overlooked the flood of Chinese spies who have infiltrated every level of our society.

Tip

Remember, you'll need basic necessities and some decent firearms / ammo and training to defend what you assets you have from those who would gladly kill you to loot it in the future. Entry-point fortification is a must, you'd be surprised how cheap it really is to make doors batter-ram / raid proof. Average katy bar sells for around $100, add $100 more for long strike plates for the side studs and a couple decent deadbolts and you got a front door that would take a quarter stick of dynamite to blast open. Marauders/looters usually take advantage by the element of surprise, and fortifying entry-points can throw them way off guard and give you enough time to take an offensive position.

In a disaster situation, looters will have already encountered and overcome similar defenses, by virtue of the door being fucking wood (if that).

If you want a door that will truly delay entry, it needs to have a monolithic metal plate of some sort that is the entire size of the door. Even a thin one exponentially increases the time and effort need to breach through the door itself, giving you and your family time to react and prepare a defense.

This of course is assuming that someone hasn't brought along battery powered tools, which are much more common and capable than they were even a decade ago.

>This of course is assuming that someone hasn't brought along battery powered tools, which are much more common and capable than they were even a decade ago.

Despite the fact that video only showed a regular door which was not properly fortified at all, that is one good point you made above. A looter could easily take a Sawzall operated on an 18V battery and cut around the deadbolt locks and door nob and then crowbar those out and open the door within a minute. However, their main disadvantage would be the homeowner hearing that Sawzall (being as loud as they are) and having enough time to grab a gun and shoot right through the front door killing the looter.

There are companies out there that specialize in selling metal plated doors if you really want some hardcore security, however you are talking at least a grand or two just for that kind of door. And many of those companies don't sell residential, only some do.

Regardless, my recommendation is get a long strike plate, mount it to the side stud (w/ 2 7/8" to 3" screws), install two drill resistant deadbolts (one near the doorknob and one a few inches down from the middle of the door - making it spaced out), and then installing a katy bar (which are pretty fucking secure, I've installed these before and each anchor comes with 4x 3" screws which you drill into the studs diagonal from one another making it tight and snug ; a looter need to bust out a large part of the stud on each side to take out a kary bar and that takes a few minutes with a batter ram).

Or buy some sheet metal and bolt it to the door.

That's not such a bad idea, it would take a bit of DIY work and reconfiguration to fit snug around the deadbolt(s) and door knob. It would likely work just fine though and not cost you nearly as much.

Here is an example of the fortification of one long "strike plate" put to the test:

Door Jamb Armor Stops Kick-Ins and a Battering Ram on Memphis News

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nJr8dxA_IJY

The contractor that did this test laughed out loud when he learned he would be doing this test. So did the Memphis Police Officer. The door was hit more than 20 times with the battering ram before it broke. Door Jamb Armor never failed!

Door Jamb Armor will take about an hour to install. If you are a do-it yourselfer, you may want to consider EZ Armor, which is much easier to install.

The biggest threat with modern homes today is they have the sliding glass doors which I refer to as "glass walls." If you have a modern home with glass walls you can forget about proper security because they can be kicked in within seconds and the looters will enter right through. My recommendation would be to board those up from the inside, using ply wood or better yet fiberglass paneling, held firm against 2 or three metal shelving beams that would be mounted with thick 10" bolts through each of the side studs. This would take some time for marauders / looters to break through that and at that point you could easily position yourself for proper offensive action.

A heavy steel portcullis that drops down from above the ceiling into an opening at least one foot below the floor would do the trick. If it's like one inch behind the door, they won't be able to kick in the door with a battering ram. But even if they break the door down completely, they're not getting in. Anyway during that time you're on the battlements dropping boiling oil on their asses...

Anon #6

There are other various methods of preventing doors from being kicked open or batter rammed through. If you install one of those katy bars that would re-enforce the door a whole lot, but you could add some strength to the door by installing 4 "door stoppers" all along the bottom of the door [<https://archive.fo/6P53n#selection-5627.0-5633.0>]. These are not only cheap as hell, they would significantly increase the amount of time for looters to be able to break into your home.

Those "door stoppers" won't do much except make the door harder to kick open, and with enough force applied (such as an actual raid) those pieces would likely bust right off.

You need something more heavy duty like the Door Jamb Armor strike plates (<https://archive.fo/6P53n#selection-5055.0-5061.0>) or even DIY strike plates like the redneck installed in the embedded pic.

implying cryptocurrency isn't just (((digits))) on a screen

Bit-Tards, ladies and gentlemen.

I totally agree with that point, my recommendation is to stay away from any unnecessary debts as possible (student loans included), and try paying off debts that you owe.

Once you have enough money saved up (preferably some of it stored outside a bank, in cash)... start stocking up on basic essentials (this includes extra food, extra water storage, guns/ammo/clips/rem oil/cleaning kits, toiletry supplies (like toilet paper), sanitation supplies (like wipes, soap, hand sanitizer, rubbing alcohol, toothbrushes, toothpicks, gloss, bic razors for shaving, etc), off-grid essentials (matches, bic lighters, candles, flashlights, solar generator, small led lamps, portable wood stove for cooking & lumber for wood, etc), tools, entry-point fortification if you got to board up during a crisis (katy bars, strike plates, drill resistant deadbolts, window bars or plywood for the windows and of-course anything you may need to install this kind of security), extra needed medicine (if you can get a hold of some / but only if essential to you), and the list goes on...

See more tips: >>>/truthexpo/3

If you have any cash or savings left over (other than paying for monthly bills of-course) I'd be diversifying it into some silver coins or other stuff that will always hold real value. Bitcoin? If you want to take the risk you can diversify savings into that too (likely only good if the grid is still up and running in the future).

Point is this: do what (((they))) do. Learn from the Zog. What are (((they))) doing? They are doing the same in order to survive this collapse and come out on top. You bet your ass (((they))) are protecting themselves, so you best do the same if you can.

On another note, some anons claim that debt won't even matter when SHTF, which I'll agree with. OK, so why pay it off? Well there is one problem we plebs have: we don't know when Shit will HTF. So if you have tons of debt, and the economy doesn't collapse soon, what happens when you can't pay the debt off? Your assets and property gets seized from you when you are forced to file for bankruptcy! So... think clearly about this. Always try to limit debts and keep a little cash in the bank to pay off monthly bills. ;)
